gus, for them or fight for them, according to the necessities of the case. He is one of the Chivalry, and before he got old the ladies used to be enamored of his flowing locks, and general beauty of appearance, to which he was himself not wholly insensible. He was a very tall man, and in mind during the delivery of the opinion of Curtis's opinion, and could not restrain the emotion of his feelings during the reading. He commented unfriendly both to the Chief Justice and to Judge Daniels, who sat either side of him. In fact, both he and the veterans it seemed as though, while Judge Curtis was reading as though they were listening to
